

Inspiring cities' transformation

The Lee Kuan Yew World City Prize offers a “remarkable overview of outstanding efforts in cities addressing pressing problems around the world” and recognises “outstanding, regenerative and inclusive cities whose innovations” have led to better “urban life in cities around the world”. Past Nominating Committee member Professor Alan Altshuler and current member Professor Marilyn Taylor talk about how the Prize inspires them and brings out cities’ transformation stories. More

What does it take to be a liveable city?

The liveability of a city is one of the four key pillars of the Lee Kuan Yew World City Prize. What exactly does liveability mean? This month, we ask the Nominating Committee members what does it take to be a liveable city?
